

Homeschool and Hybrid Educational Resources

The following is not an exhaustive list. While these resources identify as Christian, we encourage parents to do their own research to determine whether a particular option is a proper fit for their student(s).

Online School & A-la-carte Options

Online schools offer a quiet, concentrated setting in which students can engage with a robust educational system in the comfort of their homes. Many online schools offer dual enrollment options for high school students, making higher education an expedient and often times affordable investment. Some offer complete educational packages that include grading, record keeping, and transcripts, while others offer a-la-carte options. A-la-carte options offer students the chance to take rigorous courses with peers who are interested in learning the same subjects as themselves, while allowing parents to retain control over the majority of their students' education.

Alpha Omega Academy – Fully accredited online school with classes for K-12, grading and recording-keeping included. Dual credit program offers college credit courses. Accredited high school diploma offered.

Angelicum Academy – Catholic and liberal education program based on the liberal arts and the classical great books of Western civilization (with optional, Socratic discussion seminars). Offers full online classes, as well as a-la-carte options.

Academic classes are virtual on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday, and in-person student activities on Wednesday and Saturday, including field trips, hikes, team-building exercises, social events, school clubs, academic seminars, Mass, and Adoration. The Archdiocese is making available churches, community space, school buildings, classrooms, gyms, auditoriums, and science labs as sites for activities in these regions in Topsfield, Sudbury, Millis, Quincy, and Scituate.

Hybrid Schools

Hybrid schools offer a blended learning approach where home instruction and traditional school classes are offered. Whether it is in-person or online through another school, this balance between the two learning styles offers the classroom structure that many parents and students enjoy while still incorporating heavy parental involvement within the students' academia.

Abeka Academy – Video lessons for K4-12. Dual credit program offers college credit courses. Aids schools and homeschools worldwide in providing a biblically based K-12 curriculum. Offers professional training for educators with both accredited and independent studies.

MA-based In-person Communities

These in-person communities, mostly known co-operatives (co-ops) require parents to participate and contribute to the education of their students. Knowledgeable parents in a specific field collaborate to provide instruction to students within the group. However, grading varies based on co-op; sometimes parents grade the work of the students and others allow the parent-teacher to grade the students' work.

Beacon Homeschool Group: Southeastern MA co-op.
